A Little Child's Prayer.

The following heartiful little poem was written by a very interesting, gifted and lovely young girl, who has since passed from this to another world. Had she lived, she would hars doubtless adorned her age by her gonius, which was of a very high order, but the Almichty ordered it otherwise, and how, she is no doubt resping all the realities so beautifully deposted in "A Little Child's Prayer," Where singe writes make the music of the spheres. A faint little mountains silently crept O'er the face of a beautiful child as she slept,

And limbering amid the locks of gold,

Einyed till the violet even should putidd. The child felt the reach of the moon's pale light, And raised her soft eyes to the queen of night; Clasping her hands, she sliently prayed, While the slivery light o'er her sweet face played,

The kind fittle moonleam, with wings light as air. For up through the houvens flew, bearing her prayer. The angels looked down with tore and delight On the fair little child, so pure and bright.

The childish prayer, at the Throne was heard And next merning at dawn, God's messenger bird Sang to the child that her hour was come, And she heard angel values calling her home.
